MICROSOFT ACCESS™ DATABASE TRAINING

Our training methods focus on the practical application of database technology. Students learn much more than basic tricks and tips. Most importantly, students learn to think in terms of database design logic. Each custom training program involves actual client database projects, with emphasis placed on overall project concept design as well as detailed programming and development techniques.

Currently all database training is based in Access 2000 or Access 2003. Training in Access 2007 will be available soon. Most training projects will cover all areas of database development including Tables, Queries, Forms, Reports and Macros.

PROJECT MENTORING

Our project mentoring service is one-on-one training and support to complete a specific Access database project. We will work with your staff member(s) on a scheduled basis once or twice per week until the project is complete. The staff member will complete the project by being given specific tasks to perform between training sessions. Phone and email support will also be available between face-to-face sessions to keep the project on schedule.

GROUP TRAINING PROGRAMS

The project-specific nature of our group training programs is best suited for small groups of 2 to 5 people. Attendees will learn Access skills while also completing a valuable project. While most group training is focused on real projects specific to your organization, we can also provide general training similar to that provided by the well-known national training organizations. Group training can be provided at your office or an outside location.
